

Do You Hear What I Mean?

How Men and Women Communicate

"Thank you again for your enthusiastic and timely presentation, Do You Hear What I Mean. Comments included; fantastic program, great, engaging, wow fun... a BIG thank you!"

American Society for Training and Development

Do you ever feel misunderstood? Have you ever thought, "Why doesn't he/she get it?" You're not alone. While we may share a common language, women and men differ significantly in the meaning, focus, and intent of communication.

The results of these differences can range from humorous to hurt feelings, conflict, incorrect perceptions, poor morale, reduced productivity, or destruction of relationships.

Believe it or not, these differences have been documented in children as young as two years old. Much of it is biology. So what are we to do?

In this highly interactive and fun program you will learn to understand the differences, make adjustments in presentations, committee meetings, and day-to-day interaction, and gain the tools you need to close the communication gap.

Among other things participants will find out;

- why men don't like to ask for directions
- why women seem to take everything personally
- why men just want to get to the "bottom line" and women like more details
- why women have difficulty working for female bosses
- why men talk less than women except in public

This fun program, based on solid science, can improve management, sales, and anything else where men and women interact. It has even been cited as helping save a few marriages. Great for spouse programs, too.

Linda Nash

Linda@lindaNash.com

